Pan Out

Diversity in Children's Books

Pan Out Window & Mirror Books

Books are sometimes windows, offering views of worlds that may be real or imagined, familiar or strange. These windows are also sliding glass doors, and readers have only to walk through in imagination to become part of whatever world has been created or recreated by the author. When lighting conditions are just right, however, a window can also be a mirror. Literature transforms human experience and reflects it back to us, and in that reflection we can see our own lives and experiences as part of the larger human experience. Reading, then, becomes a means of self-affirmation, and readers often seek their mirrors in books.

Pan Out Who Can Tell My Story?

My belief is that there is room in the world for all stories, and that everyone has one. My hope is that those who write about the tears and the laughter and the language in my grandmother's house have first sat down at the table with us and dipped the bread of their own experiences into our stew.

Additional Resources

- Cooperative Children's Book Center at the University of Wisconsin-Madison – statistics on BIPOC books for children going back to 1995
- We Need Diverse Books – a nonprofit working to produce and promote literature that reflects and honors the lives of all young people, lots of book recommendations on their Twitter feed
- Diverse BookFinder – database of 2,000+ BIPOC picture books can be searched or browsed by identity

Training Montage Lesson Plans

- Author websites sometimes have lesson plans for their books
- NoveList (library card required) has lesson plans for some books
- Coordinate lesson planning with teachers from other schools, Equity Committee may be able to facilitate

Training Montage Talking to Parents

- If the book is part of the curriculum, it should be tied to a standard
 - Be prepared to identify and share the standard with parents
 - Diverse books are included in Oregon State Standards and the OCSD's Equity Policy
 - Contact Sara Deboy with additional questions
- If the book is part of a classroom library or from the school library, some library-specific concepts may apply
 - OCSD Librarian Doug Stull can answer additional questions
