STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE (continued)

practice and his involvement in local politics and civic affairs. Following his tenure as City Attorney, he became chief deputy in the office of Clackamas County Sheriff Wilson. In 1923 his health began to fail and he died in Portland's Sellwood Hospital on November 18, 1924. He was buried in the Story family plot in Forrester Cemetery in Eagle Creek. Bertha Gibson retained the house until her death in the early 1930's.

From recent survey information of Oregon City, William A. White, with his brother Frederick, have been identified as having designed and constructed many residential and commercial structures in Oregon City between 1880-1910.

The structure is significant for its unusual architectural character -- the only one of its style with shingle siding -- and for its association with Story, a prominent Oregon City resident.
